Susan Warren (1919-1989) Papers
1943-1988
5 cubic feet + oversize

Personal correspondence, research materials, lecture notes, photographs, audiotapes, travel materials, ephemera and journals containing Warren’s observations of China during her work as an editor and writer and her travels to China.

BIOGRAPHY:

Susan Warren was born Mildred Heiligman in New York City in 1919. She grew up in Kearny, New Jersey, and later graduated from the New Jersey College for Women (part of the Rutgers system and now Douglass College) in 1934 with an A.B. in English.

Warren had a penchant for acting, and in the mid-1930s she performed in plays with the New Labor Theatre and the New York Collective Theatre. During World War II, her interests turned to political activism, and in 1947, she became secretary to writer and activist Fred Field. Warren also worked with Maud Russell and the Committee for Democratic Far Eastern Policy as editor of the Spotlight newsletter. When the Committee disbanded in 1952, she edited brochures for the Far East Reporter. In 1957 and 1959, Warren was called before the House Un-American Activities Committee to testify about her involvement with the Communist Party. Later in 1959, she left for China, where she lived and worked as the English editor for the Peking Review until July 1961. During her tenure there and in subsequent visits (1971 and 1977), Warren had the opportunity to travel extensively, keeping journals of her observations and interviews.

Upon her return to the United States, Warren continued to edit and write for the Far East Reporter until 1970. In 1971, she became founder and co-chair of the United States-China People’s Friendship Association (USCPFA) and visited China again in the Autumn. In 1975, she became the United Nations observer and correspondent for New China, and later the US-China Review, writing a number of articles for the magazines.

Throughout the 1970s and early 1980s, Susan Warren taught at New York area colleges. From 1970 to 1975 she taught and tutored students in remedial English, English as a second language, and speech at Manhattan Community College. From 1977 to 1983 she was a mentor in individual instruction programs at Empire State College and Columbia University. During all of her years of teaching, Warren also researched China issues, wrote freelance articles and a book, edited other writers’ projects, and lectured about China to a variety of groups and classes. On October 20, 1989, Susan Warren died of cancer after a long illness. Friends and colleagues held a memorial service in her honor on January 13, 1990.

OVERSIZE BOX

Series of 4 scrapbooks entitled “China’s Liberated Regions in Picture” apparently compiled as a gift for an American military advisor by the 18th Group Army (8th Route Army) around 1945. The cover sheet for the first book was written by Dong Bi-Wu, the temporary acting chairman of the Peoples Republic of China, 1969-1975. The books contain photographs of leaders of the Chinese Communist Party during World War II (the anti-Japanese War in China) and other photos in the area around Yenan. Inscriptions and identifications are written in both Chinese and English.
