This collection is available at The State Historical Society of Missouri. If you would like more information, please contact us at shsresearch@umsystem.edu.

These are photographs copied from holdings of the Mark Twain National Forest in Rolla, Missouri. Topics include National Forest facilities and projects; forest and wood industries; water mills; lakes, rivers, and springs; mines; dams; and the Civilian Conservation Corps and Youth Conservation Corps.

Over the years the Mark Twain National Forest, at its headquarters building in Rolla, accumulated a large collection of general historical materials and miscellaneous photographs. Selected items from the former group were microfilmed earlier as collection R471. The collection described here was selected from the photograph files, and the Forest's folder numbers have been included on the Shelf List as an aid to researchers. The photographs were copied on 35mm black-and-white film and printed on contact sheets only. The resulting negatives and contact prints are intended as guides for researchers and should not be considered to be of professional copy quality. Although researchers are welcome to use these negatives to produce enlargements, they are reminded that the original prints (and, occasionally, negatives) are available for public use at the National Forest headquarters. The Western Historical Manuscript Collection's standard fees for the use of images from its holdings have been waived for this collection.

The images included in this collection were selected for their historical importance and research value. In large part the original photographs were not acquired, retained, and organized systematically by the National Forest, but instead represent an often haphazard accumulation of images from a number of sources. Additional information concerning many of the photographs can be found on the file envelopes containing the original prints at the National Forest headquarters.

This collection includes a number of images donated in the early 1980s by former members of the Civilian Conservation Corps, and were created when the camps were active in the 1930s and 1940s. Both exterior and interior views of buildings at several camps are available.

There are many views associated with the major streams which flow through the Forest. Particularly important are photographs of Turner Mill and Falling Springs Mill, water mills located in the watershed of the Eleven Point River. There are many views of sawmills which used logs obtained from National Forest timber stands. Also illustrated are associated industries such as charcoaling, chair-making, basket-making, and the manufacture of railroad ties and wooden flooring. There are also views of mines and smelters associated with southeastern Missouri's lead industry.

With minor exceptions these photographs are of scenes in southern Missouri, in or near the designated boundaries of the Mark Twain National Forest.
