The Blumberg photographs were purchased from Thelma Blumberg on December 3, 1990. Accession # A2979. Additional images were donated by Jodi Darby on October 18, 2012 Accession # 12-38

Born in St. Louis, Missouri in 1920, Thelma Blumberg worked as a free-lance photo journalist who created a large volume of photographs in the late 1950s and 1960s in a location that came to be known as Gaslight Square. Her photographs documented the neighborhood people who lived near the intersection of Olive and Boyle at a time when that area changed from a quiet antique row into one of the country’s most popular entertainment districts.

Blumberg learned about cameras and photographic equipment in the Navy, and she learned about the art of photography at art schools in Chicago and Los Angeles. In the 1960s Blumberg ‘s journalistic photography appeared often in the Sunday Magazine section of the St. Louis Globe Democrat, in the St. Louis Scene Magazine, and in St. Louis Magazine. She also served as the house photographer for Gaslight Square’s own play house, the Gateway Theatre. In 1991 The Western Historical Manuscript Collection-St. Louis purchased over 5,000 of Blumberg’s photographs. When Blumberg passed away in May, 2012, her niece Jodi Darby, donated two more boxes of photographs and negatives of subjects unrelated to Gaslight Square, including some unique images of the St. Louis Riverfront, Forest Park and the midtown area, as well as many uncatalogued negatives and proof sheets.

Images from this collection are available for viewing on the online photo database.
