The Character Research Association donated the Theodore F. Lentz papers to the Western Historical Manuscript Collection on November 19, 1980.

Ted Lentz was born in Platte County in northwest Missouri in 1888. He received a BA from Park College in Parkville, Missouri in 1914 and a Ph.D. in Psychology from Columbia University in 1925. In 1917 he had been drafted into the U.S. Army, where he served through 1919, achieving second lieutenant rank. Lentz attended graduate school at Columbia University in New York, where he developed an interest in character. He received a Ph.D. in Psychology from Columbia in 1925. During this period, he married Devere Campbell. They had a son, John, in 1925 and a daughter, Particia, born in 1927. In 1925, Columbia University published Lentz's first work, Experimental Method for the Discovery and Development of Tests of Character.

Lentz served as a professor of Education at Washington University from 1924 to 1953. In 1930 he founded the Character Research Institute at the university, and in the mid-1930s began circulating questionnaires and to measure conservative-to-radical political opinions, under a grant from the U.S. Department of Education. In 1945 the Character Research Institute changed its name to Character Research Association and began sponsoring an Attitude Research Laboratory. The lab changed its name to the Peace Research Laboratory in 1960. Lentz officially retired from full-time teaching at Washington University in 1948. During the last five years of his tenure there he devoted most of his time to developing and promoting peace research as a scientific discipline. Lentz became known as the father of peace research.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

The Theodore F. Lentz papers document his professional career as a psychologist and a peace researcher. The bulk of the papers are from 1940-1976. There are very few personal papers such as family correspondence, diaries, or photographs.

The Character Research Institute papers document Lentz's early research and methodology which he later used in his peace research. The Conservatism- Radicalism Opinionaire and the Youth Expressionaire are the prototypes for his later peace propositionaires and opinionaires. The bulk of the character research material is the C-R Opinionaire and the Youth Expressionaire files. Only originals of these tests were saved; duplicate tests, both blank and answered, were returned to the donor.

As Lentz switched to peace research after 1945 so did the Character Research Institute, which changed its name to the Character Research Association (CRA). The early administrative records for the CRA are incomplete, although a daily journal kept from 1946-1951 fills in most of the gaps. Lentz had a wide correspondence and most is substantive with discussion of ideas, problems, and methodology. Lentz's developing interest in peace research is well documented through opinionaries, platform statements, notes, and correspondence.

Of his three peace research books, Towards A Science of Peace has the most material, including original ideas, drafts, manuscripts, notes, publication correspondence, book promotion, book reviews, and foreword and annotations by Julian Huxley. His original idea for a book in 1948 can be traced through its first publication in 1955. There are a few book reviews and a topic outline for Towards A Technology of Peace. There are no manuscripts, notes, or correspondence. Humatriotism was co-authored with twelve other peace researchers. Correspondence on their portion of the book and biographical sketches of the co-authors are included.

Lentz's books influenced others and inspired several peace research centers around the world. Two of these, the Canadian Peace Research Institute and the Peace Centre in England, were founded by two individuals after reading TASOP. The growth of both centers is documented in the papers and especially in the correspondence between Lentz and Norman Alcock, Kenneth and Elise Boulding, Hannah and Alan Newcombe, Patrick Deighan, and Paul Smoker. Articles by these peace researchers were saved because of Lentz's direct influence on their ideas. The peace research files, along with Lentz's books, reveal how he developed his ideas. He wrote notes on 3 x 5 cards, scrap paper, and typing paper and these were found throughout the papers. Many were returned to the donor but a representative group of files was retained. With folder titles of "Monday, a.m.", "Thots", or "Cogitation", they show how Lentz started with an idea, later wrote about it to a friend, devised a propositionaire, and eventually included it in an article, book or speech. His notes give the impression of someone constantly thinking who wrote the process down so as not to forget. Some of the notes are very personal, in the nature of motivation, perhaps to convince him to continue his work.

Lentz had contact with a wide variety of people and organizations. His outreach to the community included radio talks, education courses, seminars, conferences and speeches. Many of these are found in the papers. This outreach promoted his ideas, the CRA and the Peace Research Laboratory and education. Lentz was a member, contributor, correspondent or on the mailing list of numerous pacifist and world government organizations. Sample brochures and correspondence were saved from 144 organizations to reflect the range of these groups. A list of organizations is at the beginning of the series.

Oral histories were done with two close friends of Lentz, Louise Robison, who lived with him and Enola, and Joy Guze, a student and lifelong friend. William ckhardt, a colleague and director of the Peace Research Laboratory after Lentz, also was interviewed. Questionnaires were sent to twelve friends and colleagues around the world for their assessment of Lentz's influence and contribution to peace research. The responses are included in the papers.
