William L. Hungate represented Missouri's Ninth Congressional District from November 1964 through 1976. Hungate served as an infantryman in World War II. Following the war he earned a law degree from Harvard Law School and then entered the practice of law in Troy, Missouri. In Congress, Hungate served as a member the House Select Committee on Small Business and the D.C. Committee. Most importantly, his membership on the House Judiciary Committee gave Hungate a prominent role in the efforts to formulate articles impeaching President Richard M. Nixon. He gained national attention during the televised debate preceding the Committee’s vote to adopt the articles. Moreover, Hungate chaired the Judiciary Committee’s Subcommittee on Criminal Justice in its investigation of President Gerald Ford’s pardon of Richard M. Nixon following the latter’s resignation from the presidency on August 9, 1974.

The Watergate scandal represents one of the most extraordinary political events in American history. An apparently simple burglary of the Democratic Party National Headquarters in the Watergate office complex in Washington, DC on June 17, 1972 ultimately forced Richard M. Nixon to become the only president to resign his office. The Watergate burglary and its aftereffects gripped the nation via newspapers, news magazines, and television for two years. Americans, Republicans as well as Democrats, were stunned to discover that their president and his closest advisors were involved in political espionage, bribery, dirty tricks, money laundering, and lying on a monumental scale. The revelation in the spring of 1973 that White House aides had connections with the Watergate burglars compelled President Nixon to fire three close advisors, H. R. Haldeman, John Ehrlichman, and John Dean. Many others would follow the latter three to resignation and/or prison in the ensuing months.

Congress became involved in the Watergate scandal in May 1973 when the Senate established a special committee, chaired by Senator Sam Ervin (D-N.C.), to investigate the matter. Senate hearings, shown daily on television, became a national obsession. Startling new facts and confessions followed one another throughout 1973 and much of 1974, notably the discovery of a tape recording system in the White House Oval Office. The tapes purportedly included Nixon’s discussions with Haldeman and Ehrlichman on ways to cover up White House “dirty tricks” and stymie further investigation of the Watergate burglary. In July 1974, the Supreme Court ruled that President Nixon had to provide the tapes or complete transcripts to the Senate committee, to a special prosecutor from Attorney General’s office, and to the House Judiciary Committee.
The House of Representatives, in October 1973, also granted its Judiciary Committee the authority to investigate President Nixon’s part in the Watergate incident. In late December, the House committee appointed a special counsel to investigate and assemble evidence concerning possible charges of impeachment against the President. The Judiciary Committee and its special counsel spent the ensuing months assembling evidence, including taking testimony from presidential advisors and other key witnesses. As had been the case with the Senate investigation, the House Judiciary Committee faced obstruction and defiance from the White House when it subpoenaed documents, and above all, the tapes. By the time the Supreme Court ruled that Nixon had to provide tapes and transcripts to the Senate and the House, the latter was at work preparing articles of impeachment. Once approved by the Committee the entire House would vote on the articles. Approval meant the House had “impeached” the President. That is, they would have charged him with “high crimes and misdemeanors” as prescribed by the Constitution. Following that, the President would face a trial before the entire Senate.

The Supreme Court decision to compel the President to turn over the White House tapes and the Judiciary Committee’s July 30, 1974 approval of three articles as grounds for impeachment, led Richard Nixon to submit his resignation in an August 8, 1974 television announcement.

Democrats controlled both houses of Congress, and so held the majority on both the Senate select committee and the House Judiciary Committee. Under the circumstances, the potential for animosity and suspicion was high. Partisan wrangling, however, remained minimal. For example, when the House Judiciary Committee hired a lawyer to serve as its special counsel it selected John Doar, formerly an Assistant Attorney General in the Eisenhower administration. Composed to twenty-one Democrats and sixteen Republicans, the House Judiciary Committee in particular had a reputation as one of the least partisan committees in the House. The vote approving three articles of impeachment counted the twenty-one Democrats and seven Republicans.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

Hungate’s papers reflect the Committee’s efforts to keep partisanship under control. (It must be noted that, well before the issue of impeachment arose, Hungate wrote a satirical song called “Down at the Old Watergate,” the recorded version gained national attention. Several folders in the collection concern the song.) As the extent of the Watergate cover-up expanded, however, Hungate dropped the comedy. The part that he played in the televised debate of the Judiciary Committee’s articles of impeachment prompted masses of mail from throughout the country, and that correspondence composes half of the collection.

Professor Stanley I. Kutler, a leading scholar of the Watergate affair has observed that Hungate, a liberal Democrat, was a “witty, shrewd man, as he had demonstrated throughout the impeachment inquiry.” (In The Wars of Watergate: The Last Crisis of Richard Nixon 1990). Kutler’s assessment is reflected in the correspondence segment of the collection.

SERIES DESCRIPTION

SERIES 1 CONSTITUENT CORRESPONDENCE WITH HUNGATE, JULY-AUGUST 1973-NOVEMBER 1974, FOLDERS 1-168
Constituent mail, from across the nation as well as from Missourians, composes the most historically significant part of the collection. It is interesting to note that Hungate’s staff often kept a numerical count of the anti and pro Nixon sentiments, as may be seen in manila folders with daily counts noted. (NB—tabulations are sometimes preceded with the letters CD—meaning the 9th Congressional District; OOD—meaning within Missouri but out of the 9th district; OOS—meaning out of state.) As the volume of mail grew the frequency of the tabulations dropped off, presumably because the Hungate office did not have the time to keep up with the work.

SERIES 2 CORRESPONDENCE, MEMOS, AND PRINTED DOCUMENTS RELATED TO THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE’S DELIBERATIONS ON THE IMPEACHMENT QUESTION, 1971-1974, FOLDERS 169-258

The printed documents in this series include transcripts of some White House tapes and Congressional Documents related to Watergate and to President Gerald Ford’s pardon of Richard Nixon. Most of the correspondence relates to the internal operations of the Judiciary Committee during the impeachment investigations and the voting on the articles of impeachment.

Hungate’s staff, and perhaps Hungate himself, assiduously collected newspaper and news magazine coverage of the Watergate question from beginning to end, particularly whenever Hungate and/or the Judiciary Committee was a topic. It is a convenient source for how the print press treated the Watergate question.

Throughout his Congressional career, Hungate recorded 5-7 minute audio tapes discussing his activities in Congress. The tapes were given to radio stations in the 9th Congressional district of Missouri. These tapes include material on the Watergate question.
