Join the State Historical Society in Celebrating Veterans’ Stories

On March 13 the State Historical Society of Missouri (SHSMO) and the MU Veterans Center are honoring those who have served in the armed forces. Proud to Be: Celebrating Veterans, to be held on the University of Missouri-Columbia campus from 5:00 to 8:00 p.m., will capture your senses as authors read excerpts from a recent anthology of essays, fiction, poetry, and interviews by and about veterans and their families.

The evening will begin at 5:00 p.m. in Memorial Union’s Stotler Lounge III with veterans sharing their stories from Proud to Be: Writing by American Warriors. According to Dr. Susan Swartwout, editor of the anthology, it is important to hear veterans’ experiences in their own words.

“A nation should never have its military history written solely by military officials or historians,” Swartwout said. “That’s only part of the story. Groups like the State Historical Society of Missouri—and anthologies like Proud to Be: Writing by American Warriors—not only preserve the words but also get those words into the hands and minds of civilians, scholars, historians, students, family, friends, and those who will follow us in future centuries.”

These important written and oral histories provide an opportunity for retrospection and can create public awareness that is helpful in facing future conflicts, according to Carol W. Fleisher, director of the MU Veterans Center. “Securing and sharing veteran oral histories is our only hope of people learning from it and not sending our men and women as our first option,” Fleisher said. “War should be the last option. No one goes to war and comes back exactly like they left.”

SHSMO Executive Director Gary Kremer said that is why the Society participates in the Missouri Veterans History Project, which reached the milestone of recording its five hundredth oral history in 2013.

“The Civil War, Vietnam, the War in Afghanistan—war shapes our history like few other things, no matter which era,” Kremer said. “Without an honest appreciation of what it was really like for our troops and their friends and families back home, how can we expect to heal

Missouri’s 200th birthday is seven years away as the state officially entered the Union on August 10, 1821. Nonetheless, the State Historical Society of Missouri (SHSMO) is already at work planning for the festivities. SHSMO’s Bicentennial Committee held a focus group meeting on January 24 with Society members and organizations in northeast Missouri. The objective was to begin incorporating the area’s unique history into the statewide bicentennial plans and to develop relationships with local organizations.

“Who better understands the vibrant history of our region than the museums, genealogical societies, and other organizations that help us celebrate it every day?” said Judge Robert Clayton III, a member of the SHSMO board of trustees. “Groups like our host, the Mark Twain Museum, are invaluable resources to help plan a comprehensive approach for the bicentennial.”

The pilot meeting investigated not only possible statewide initiatives but also potential organizational strategies, community stakeholders, and partnerships.

New Oral History Collection Focuses on Desegregation and Civil Rights in Missouri

A Missouri School of Journalism graduate student’s project has helped launch the State Historical Society of Missouri’s new Missouri Desegregation and Civil Rights Oral History Project (C4116). Roxanne Foster, now an MU graduate, initially focused her master’s project on the desegregation of Douglass and Hickman high schools during the late 1950s in Columbia, Missouri. Thanks to her collaboration with the Society’s oral historian, Jeff D. Corrigan, the collection has a strong foundation.

As the project moves forward, the Society will preserve stories about the desegregation of Missouri’s public schools and its impact on the civil rights movement across the state. The collection for this ongoing oral history project will remain open, and interviews on this very important topic will continue to be added. To view the current inventory, visit shs.umsystem.edu/manuscripts/invent/4116.

The Missouri Conference on History Planned for March 17-18 in Jefferson City

The Missouri Conference on History will provide a preview of keynote speaker Lea VanderVelde’s new book, Redemption Songs: Suing for Freedom before Dred Scott. VanderVelde, a law professor at the University of Iowa, has unearthed nearly 300 freedom suits brought by slaves in the St. Louis courts. Her book is scheduled for release in May from Oxford University Press. Join us at the luncheon on Monday, March 17, to be enlightened by her discoveries. The 2014 conference, hosted by the Missouri State Archives, is sure to inspire with the presentation of new scholarship, information exchanges between colleagues, and exploration of new ways to promote public interest in history and the welfare of the history field as a profession. Register by February 21 to receive the early rate of $45.00 at shs.umsystem.edu/mch.

Spotlight on Columbia Volunteer

As the former managing editor of Sheba Review Publishing, a past educator at Columbia College, and the author of The Life of Helen Stephens: The Fulton Flash, Sharon Kinney Hanson has a strong résumé. Fortunately for the Society, she includes SHSMO in her list of civic involvements.

Hanson first became engaged in 1990 when she was archiving the Helen Stephens Papers. Since then she and her husband have donated her father-in-law’s World War II letters and papers (the Wilson O. Hanson Papers), and she has volunteered as a judge for National History Day in Missouri for five years. She recently began volunteering regularly at SHSMO.

“What interests me still about SHSMO is the many supportive roles that it plays: educational for the general public, preservation, support for the researcher, archival,” Hanson said. “All of its facets have significant value to many people for a variety of reasons.”

Her work scanning the Society’s extensive photograph collection helps to ensure that the images are preserved for future generations. Hanson’s background has also been an asset in media relations, which opened new avenues for her personal communications, including Facebook and Twitter.

“I have the opportunity to work with like-minded professionals, and I will gain a sense of contributing to and being of assistance to the Society’s ongoing work,” Hanson said. “To do something useful to others means a lot to me. Of course, I’m enjoying myself as well.”

Nebraska State Historical Society Offering Great Plains Research Grants

In May 2014 the Nebraska State Historical Society will award up to three research grants of $1,000 each to support the work of scholars pursuing original research and interpretive writing on some aspect of history or archaeology of Nebraska or the Great Plains. Applications must be emailed or postmarked by April 1, 2014.

Applicants from any background, including academic and public historians, graduate students, and independent researchers, are welcome to apply. Recipients are expected to spend at least one week during the grant period in residence in Lincoln working with materials from the Nebraska State Historical Society collections. The grants are intended to support research that will lead to submission of a manuscript for possible publication in the NSHS’s quarterly journal, Nebraska History, or another appropriate venue. For more details, see http://nebraskahistory.org/publish/grants/resgrant.

Imagery of the Everyday Civil War Online in Sheet Music Collection

As last year’s exhibit Money, Mail, and Memoria: Ephemera of the Civil War Era highlighted, much can be learned about a time period through its everyday objects. A Society collection recently placed online extends this insight to popular sheet music from the Civil War period.

Twenty-three songs from the Civil War Sheet Music Collection are now available through the State Historical Society of Missouri website. The web assortment currently features mostly Southern examples written for piano, yet there are hopes of expanding the number of pieces offered at the site.

Take advantage of the collection by visiting shs.umsystem.edu and searching for sheet music. Help support manuscript preservation and increased access to collections by making a gift to the Manuscript Collections fund today. Donate online at shsofmo.org/store/donation or contact the Society at 573.882.7083.

The Research Center-Cape Girardeau continues to seek avenues for spreading the news about the State Historical Society of Missouri and its newest location. A series of open houses, which began in October 2013, invite the Southeast Missouri State University (SEMO) campus and the general public to the Research Center-Cape Girardeau.

The events provide an opportunity for community members and SEMO faculty, graduate students, and undergraduates to view the variety of historical resources at the Cape Girardeau center. Items displayed include papers from the Oliver Collection, which holds the records of a prominent southeast Missouri family and law firm, as well as artifacts from the Southeast Missouri Medical Society and materials from other collections.

The open houses allow for connections between southeast Missourians, Society staff, and SHSMO members, said Robert Mueller, a member of the Society’s executive committee.

A series of open houses, which began in October 2013, invite the Southeast Missouri State University campus and the general public to the Research Center-Cape Girardeau. Later this year the Center will have a special event when it moves into its new, refurbished quarters on the ground floor of Pacific Hall.
New Prizes: Stop the Presses and Show Me!

Students coming to the 2014 National History Day in Missouri state contest will have the opportunity to apply for two new special prizes, one sponsored by the Missouri Press Association and one by the State Historical Society of Missouri’s Bicentennial Committee. Visit nhdmo.org for more details on each of these new student prizes.

Be Part of the 2014 NHD Experience

The National History Day in Missouri state contest will be held April 26 at the University of Missouri-Columbia. If you have ever watched TV or visited a website, then you are ready to help judge this contest! Its five categories—documentary, exhibit, paper, performance, and website—have something for everyone. Join us as a judge and be amazed by Missouri’s students! To sign up, visit: nhdmo.org/judges or call 573.882.0189.

Hang Out with National History Day for Expert Tips

National History Day launched its first Google Hangout series in January and February. Partnering with the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Newseum, and the Smithsonian, NHD held five hangouts—one for each project category—featuring experts who talked about their approaches to creating powerful documentaries, exhibits, papers, performances, and websites.

Designed to be highly interactive among the experts, students, and educators, NHD invited questions in advance and tweeted live during the events. Maggie Mayhan, National History Day in Missouri state coordinator, joined the panel for the documentary hangout.

“This was an amazing opportunity for students to hear from an expert, be able to ask questions, and see samples of professional work,” Mayhan said. “It also encouraged them to view their own NHD work as a professional project and set high goals for what the finished product can be.”

Watch National History Day in Missouri’s social media for details on future Google Hangout sessions so you can tap into the experience of experts in the field.

Missouri Team Selected for Normandy Institute

Alexander Bueneman and his teacher Angela Allison from Oak Grove High School in Oak Grove, Missouri, have been invited to participate in the 2014 Albert H. Small Normandy: Sacrifice for Freedom Student and Teacher Institute, which offers an in-depth history of the Normandy invasion and focuses on remembering the D-Day veterans. One of only 15 students selected from an international application pool, Bueneman will step into history, attending lectures presented by leading World War II historians and participating in a scholarly study of the war memorials in the Washington, DC, area before traveling to Normandy, France. On one of D-Day’s historic beaches, he will give a eulogy in remembrance of an individual soldier, sailor, or marine from Missouri.

Thomas Hart Benton’s American Mythologies
April-October  Main Gallery  Research Center-Columbia

To commemorate the 125th anniversary of the artist’s birth on April 15, 1889, this exhibition showcases Thomas Hart Benton artworks that explore the mythic West, including subjects such as Jesse James and the writings of Mark Twain. Visit the Main Gallery at the Research Center-Columbia this April through October to view the intersections of American cultural heritage in Benton's regionalist images.

Thomas Hart Benton Birthday Bash
April 12  Research Center-Columbia

Join SHSMO and the Museum of Art and Archaeology (MAA) for an afternoon of activities celebrating the 123th birthday of Thomas Hart Benton, including a chance to “meet” him as MAA docent Gary Beahan answers questions in costume! 1 p.m. - 2:45 p.m. – Inspired by Benton: Kids Create and Curate! – At this fun family event kids ages five to twelve will create a special exhibition of cards celebrating Benton's birthday. Dr. Joan Stack, SHSMO's art curator, will provide a short tour of the new American Mythologies exhibit. Children will then make birthday cards inspired by the pieces on display. When finished, the kids will help design a temporary exhibit showcasing them in the Society's Corridor Gallery. The event is free, but space is limited. Register by contacting SHSMO at 573.882.7083 or shsofmo@umsystem.edu.

National History Day in Missouri State Contest
April 26  University of Missouri-Columbia campus

Nearly 600 sixth- through twelfth-grade students from every corner of the state will converge on the MU campus for the National History Day in Missouri state contest. Advancing from nine regional contests, these top students will present their documentaries, exhibits, papers, performances, and websites that explore “Rights and Responsibilities in History.” Finalists will serve as Missouri delegates to the national contest June 15-19 at the University of Maryland-College Park. NHDMO is sponsored by SHSMO, in partnership with the Missouri Humanities Council.

German American Newspapers Shape Hermann's Culture

The history of Hermann, Missouri, starts with a comparison. In the Report on a Journey to the Western States of North America (1829), Gottfried Duden wrote about the Missouri River valley. His widely circulated description of the similarities between this region and the Rhine River valley in Germany is often credited with bringing the first wave of German settlers to the area. The land he described between St. Louis and what would become Hermann seemed an ideal setting for a colony promoting traditional German culture. In fact, the German Settlement Society of Philadelphia founded Hermann in the 1830s because of Duden's enthusiasm for the region.

At the heart of the new German American community was Eduard Mühl, who immigrated to Hermann with his family in 1843. Mühl and a brother-in-law, Karl Strehly, brought a printing press with them and started a German-language newspaper, the Hermanner Wochenblatt, that same year.

A freethinker, Mühl's editorials sometimes caused controversy. The editor was an early and outspoken critic of slavery, a position that took courage because many of his neighbors were slaveholders. Mühl also advocated for the cultivation of grapes and the production of quality wines when the town was facing economic hardships. Education was another passion for Mühl, and he spoke out against the exclusive use of English in public schools. In Hermann, classes were conducted in both English and German to advance the German identity that the town promoted.

Mühl passed away from cholera in 1854, but the independent spirit of the newspaper continued under a new owner. Jacob Graf, like Mühl, was an abolitionist who advocated in print for the antislavery cause despite the dangers it posed for him. During his tenure, Graf changed the name of the newspaper to the Hermanner Volksblatt. After Graf passed away in 1870, his family turned to Joseph Leising for help to keep the paper running in German. This tradition continued until 1928, despite the pressure placed on German culture during World War I.

Leising and Graf's widow, Christina, started a new venture in 1872, forming the publishing company C. Graf & Co. It was under this name that the first English newspaper was published in Gasconade County, the Hermann Advertiser. The population of Hermann, still almost exclusively of German heritage, was willing to subscribe to both papers. An editorial from the fortieth birthday of the Advertiser-Courier stated, "The subscribers of the German paper (the Volksblatt) saw in the 'English' paper the means of acquiring the language of their adopted country and at the same time induce their children to read and learn English, [and] became subscribers of both papers, the local news being generally a literal translation from that published in the German weekly and thus formed attractive supplementary reading for the young Teutons."

This comparison of German newspapers to their English counterparts can still be made today as issues from both the Hermanner Volksblatt and the Advertiser-Courier will soon be freely available to the public in the Missouri Digital Newspaper Project at shs.umsystem.edu/newspaper/mdnp.

Thanks to a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities and the Library of Congress, this keyword-searchable collection of 138 digitized newspapers from the 1800s through the early 1920s is growing. In fact, 106,695 pages were added thanks to the Scenic Regional Library Newspaper Digitization Project, which supplemented the titles available with the addition of the Advertiser-Courier and thirteen other newspapers from Gasconade, Warren, and Franklin counties.

The Hermanner Wochenblatt translates to Herman Weekly. It was renamed the Hermanner Volksblatt in 1856. Volksblatt means the people sheet.
F Company—Fall In—Step Alive

Many years had passed since they had told each other good-bye. Faces had changed. Some men were thinner, and others more rounded out. “I know you but just can’t recall your name” echoed through the jolly crowd in Kansas City around the Liberty Memorial on Sunday, August 31, 1930.

Members of F Company, 140th Infantry, were gathered for their first reunion since the 35th Division had demobilized and members were discharged at Camp Funston in 1919. At about 4:30 p.m. they formed in line for a parade. However, this time they filed into more than twenty-six cars escorted throughout the city by mounted police.

After the parade, the group broke into informal parties and gathered in the homes of several of the “boys.” A business meeting of the 140th F Club followed the next day, which opened with all standing at attention as an American flag was placed in honor and memory of their departed buddies. The club was a new organization formed to promote and perpetuate the friendship and comradeship of their army days during the war and in duties on the Mexican border. But it also aided and assisted fellow members who might need help.

Composed of the organized National Guard of Kansas and Missouri, the 35th Division mustered ten thousand Kansas men and fourteen thousand Missouri men into the federal service on August 5, 1917. Their war casualties were 1,480 dead, 6,001 wounded, and 167 captured.

Beginning in September 1930, the 140th F Club convened in Kansas City for monthly meetings and annual reunions until 1974, at which time the organization turned to a more informal structure before disbanding altogether in 1982. The final reunion photo shows an aged and much reduced group of men, fifty-five years after their return from war. In those intervening years they had watched as the country went through a Great Depression, fought another world war, and became a superpower. Behind them hangs a banner listing all the names of their buddies in the club and the dates of their passing.

Besides their legacy of service, they left for posterity their 140th F Club Records (K0119) consisting of meeting minutes, financial records, membership records, and memorabilia related to the group’s activities. Also included is a series of photographs of annual reunions, ca. 1930-74.

35th Division History

Composed of the organized National Guard of Kansas and Missouri, the 35th Division mustered ten thousand Kansas men and fourteen thousand Missouri men into the federal service on August 5, 1917. After over seven months of training at Camp Doniphan, the division landed in England on May 7, 1918, and arrived in France on May 10. They participated in the Battle of St. Mihiel and the Meuse-Argonne Offensive from September until the armistice on November 11.

After the armistice, they spent some weeks in the Le Mans area before returning to America in April 1919. Their war casualties were 1,480 dead, 6,001 wounded, and 167 captured, most of them sustained in the Meuse-Argonne Offensive, where the losses were heavy.

The final reunion photo of the 140th F Club shows an aged and much reduced group of men, fifty-five years after their return from World War I. Behind them hangs a banner listing all the names of their buddies in the club and the dates of their passing.

The group formed to promote and perpetuate the friendship and comradeship of their army days in the World War and on the Mexican Border. The tradition of meeting monthly began in September of 1930 and lasted twenty-four years.
The recent polar vortex was indeed a historic event that closed the Missouri University of Science and Technology campus and the Research Center-Rolla due to weather for the first time in living memory. Eight inches of snow followed by subzero temperatures left everyone longing for warmer days. For those tired of winter, the recent accession of William Recklein's family photographs offers an escape to summers past in Missouri.

William Recklein (1872-1962) was born into a St. Louis German family and served in the First Missouri Infantry during the Spanish-American War. He married another southside German, Ida S. Rau, in 1902. Recklein was a banker, and in 1906 he became an officer of the Bank of Cuba in Crawford County. William and Ida moved to Cuba and made it their home for the remainder of their lives. The couple was prominent in community affairs until Ida's death in 1955. Afterward, William became the town's most notable benefactor when he bought and donated for public use Cuba's historic school buildings, including the fieldstone edifice that is now the home of the Crawford County Historical Society. Recklein also funded a new library in Ida's memory, which was dedicated a few months after his own death in 1962.

Recklein's Spanish-American War papers and his correspondence with Ida are among the earliest collections held in Rolla. Recently, staff scanned selected images from two Recklein family photograph albums and dozens of photographs in the Crawford County Historical Society collections. The albums, circa 1902-03, contain pictures of home life in St. Louis, social activities with Recklein's six sisters and his in-laws, and the family's recreational pursuits.

The family had notable summertime outings to the Gasconade River hamlet of Schlicht, near Crocker in Pulaski County. John Schlicht developed his mill, store, and post office into Schlicht Springs Lodge, a country resort catering to the St. Louis sporting crowd. Rod and gun columns in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat documented hunting and fishing expeditions and publicized the recreational possibilities along the upper Gasconade River. About 1900 the Frisco Railroad's passenger department began promoting the nascent summer resort industry, boosting Schlicht's lodge and other Gasconade locations as vacation destinations. The resorts were advertised as easily reached on the Frisco, and for a generation of city dwellers the scenic Gasconade region became an oasis for relaxation and recreation.

The Recklein albums illustrate railroad tourism in the region. The family was probably among the earliest to vacation there, and the photographs show that bathing, boating, fishing, and other activities on the river were not solely the domain of men. Women, in fact, outnumber the men in the Recklein images, which include Ida Recklein and William's sisters. Proprietor Schlicht promoted his peaceful millponds as the ideal place for women to learn the art of fishing before venturing out on the wild Gasconade, and several of the collection's pictures suggest that some of the women in the party were competent anglers.

Perhaps the most singular photograph in the collection shows the Recklein party waiting for the return train at Schlicht Station. The view of the trackside passenger shelter is the only known photograph of the simple structure that marked the beginning and end of hundreds of summer vacations at a once-favored tourist destination in the Ozarks. For more on William and Ida Recklein and their contributions, visit the Crawford County Historical Society museum.
Ancestry.com Now Available at the Research Center-St. Louis

The online genealogical service Ancestry.com has arrived at the Research Center-St. Louis reading room. Join us to track your family history through this popular website and its ancillary services:

- Newspapers.com—A searchable database of historical newspapers from the 1700s to the 2000s.
- Fold3.com—An online collection containing original military records.

The services are freely available in the reading room, but there are no printing capabilities. Researchers should bring a USB drive to save their findings. Plan ahead by consulting the online records at shs.umsystem.edu/manuscripts to ensure the Society’s own collections that illuminate the experiences of your ancestors are onsite for your visit. The Research Center-St. Louis holds a wealth of information on the history of the St. Louis area and its people.

Collection on African American Education in St. Louis Expanded through Donation

Another chapter in the history of Sumner High School, the first high school for African American students west of the Mississippi River, was recently added to the John Davis Buckner Papers (S0468). Scrapbooks with news clippings and administrative files documenting the school’s activities from the late 1940s to the mid-1980s add new details to the original collection.

This treasure of information was donated by Richard Washington, whose father, Arthur, served as Sumner’s assistant principal alongside Buckner. The addition supplements an already rich collection holding highlights such as artifacts from Sumner High School’s 100th anniversary, records on the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity and the Annie Malone Children’s Home, and Buckner’s personal correspondence. It also boasts a file on his mother, Dr. Julia Davis, the noted educator who spent forty-eight years in the St. Louis Public Schools system.

St. Louis Regional Chamber Donation Provides Glimpse into Urban Development Efforts

The St. Louis Regional Chamber, formerly the Regional Commerce and Growth Association, recently donated a large collection of videotapes, photographs, and slides. The collection showcases many of St. Louis’s favorite attractions throughout the 1960s and into the new millennium, from Union Station to the St. Louis Zoo as well as the Kiel Center, the Arch, and the St. Louis Symphony.

The St. Louis Regional Chamber supports efforts at planned development of the region across the governing lines of St. Louis’s various municipalities, and the donation also features video of the St. Louis Cardinals’ championship in 1982 and the team’s follow-up appearances in the World Series in 1985 and 1987. Glimpses into civic promotional campaigns such as Right On! and Left On! from the 1970s and Sold On St. Louis in the 1990s are also included in the collection.

The Regional Chamber combines historic efforts by the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, the Metropolitan Plan Commission, the St. Louis Regional Industrial Development Corporation, and the Regional Commerce and Growth Association.
