SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

These diaries give a daily account of the life of a common soldier in the western Border States during the Civil War. McMahan left his seminary studies in the east to join the Union army. He was an avid observer of the terrain with its geological formations and fossils, the agriculture, and the weather, and he painstakingly noted the distances marched each day or traveled from one fort or town to another. McMahan also provides a vivid description of the many facets of military life and its frustrations. Please note that copies were made of the diaries, and were left with the originals. The additional material consists of correspondence to and from family members, concerning family matters, the military and the Civil War. Also included are photographs of Robert T. McMahan and Katherine McMahan, various diplomas and certificates, as well as Civil War and Pre-Civil War newspapers. In addition is a printed roster of the Ohio 25th Company Artillery Battery, Volunteers.
