Introduction

Approximately 10 cubic feet

The collection includes correspondence, scrapbooks, military mementos, articles, short stories, plays, poetry, and other material by James William Earp. A number of his short stories, in published form, are included in the collection.

The papers in this collection have been organized in the following manner:

Folders 1-17: Correspondence, in chronological order.

Folders 18-29: World War I materials including correspondence, mementos, a scrapbook, some of Earp’s writings and notes and other materials including maps related to Earp’s service in France.

Folder 30: A general scrapbook of clippings and correspondence related to Earp’s career with the Rock Island Railroad and to his career as an author.

Folders 31-49: Short articles, which Earp wrote regarding his view of short story writing, the nature of writing and publishing especially from the perspective as a “pulp” magazine author.

Folders 50-77: These folders contain short stories by Earp. Some of these short stories appeared as individual items in various magazines and some were parts of series Earp prepared for different magazines.

Folders 78-89: Boomer Jones. Stories in folders 78-85 appear to be complete, while those in 86-89 are incomplete.

Folders 90-114: Railroad short stories. Stories in these folders appear to be complete. On occasion, there may be several drafts of a story, or a part of the story, along with what appears to be the final draft.

Folders 115-219: Short stories on non-railroad topics. These stories are frequently about romance and heartbreak but stories on sports, boxing, and the Wild West are also included. These folders seem to contain complete manuscripts.

Folders 220-228: Military short stories. These stories seem to be complete.

Folders 229-232: The stories in these folders represent complete short stories with Earp’s pseudonym indicated. He utilized the name A.N. Oldtimer, Jacques Girouard, and Joseph L. Gish.

Folders 233-245: Short plays, poetry, and short humorous pieces.

Folders 246-257: Partial or incomplete short stories about railroads. Some of the folders include nearly completed stories, while others include drafts of material, which represent attempts to develop characters, themes and plots.

James William Earp Papers

Folders 258-300: Partial or incomplete short stories, non-railroad themes and characters. Folders 301-394: Articles and short stories on writing and publishing as well as railroad and non-railroad topics are included. The majority of the stories relate, however, to railroad themes.

Throughout the inventory, Earp’s titles for the short stories have been used in the folder descriptions whenever possible. When titles have not been given, the name of a principal character has been used as a folder title. In a few cases, other folder titles have been assigned.

James W. Earp was born in Clarence, Missouri, on June 15, 1888. Earp began his career as a railroader in Clement, Oklahoma, in 1904, and later moved to Kansas City, Missouri, in 1914. He joined the Rock Island Railroad in 1912, and stayed with the company until his retirement 44 years later in 1956.

Earp’s employment with Rock Island Railroad was interrupted by his World War I service when he was with Company C, 68th Engineers and later in the 58th Company Transportation Corps in France. While in the army, he wrote for the Camp Garrett Camouflage and worked briefly for Stars and Stripes.

In addition to his railroad career, Earp worked as an author of short stories throughout his life. He first ventured into writing at the age of fifteen by writing for his high school newspaper. His career as a published author began in 1916 when Railroad Man’s Magazine accepted his short story, which then developed into a series.

While the range of topics for Earp’s short stories was quite broad, he was especially successful in writing stories based on railroad themes. Earp also wrote anonymously for magazines such as True Confessions during the 1920s and 1930s, submitting stories about faltering romances and heartbreak. His many short stories also appeared in such magazines as Railroad Man’s Magazine, Railroad Stories, Argosy, Top Notch, Smart Set, American Boy, War Stories, Railroad Magazine, and Wayside Tales.

After retiring from the Rock Island Railroad in 1956, Earp continued to write until his death in 1958 at age 70.
