ULTIMATE FRISBEE IN COLLEGE BOW

Ultimate Frisbee, created by a group of youngsters at Columbia High School in New Jersey, made its intercollegiate debut an auspicious one in a match between the two universities which also introduced college football, Rutgers and Princeton.

And, on the same ground where college football debuted 103 years ago, Rutgers, led by Irv Kalb, Geoff West and Dan "Stork" Roddick emulated the triumph of the gridders of yore with a 29 to 27 victory.

A crowd of 1,000 was reported on hand for the spectacle by the New York Times, and all thrilled to the competition. Ultimate Frisbee is played by two seven-member squads during two 24-minute halves. Each team tries to pass

W. Va. Youth Is Jr. Frisbee Champ

Paul Wilson, a 15-year-old youngster from Charleston, W. Virginia, survived a pressure-packed finish to win the Fourth Annual National Junior Frisbee Championships at the Las Vegas Hilton Hotel.

Wilson won out over 10 other U.S. Regional Champions, earning the championship trophy and a $1,000 U.S. Savings Bond. Kevin Schmidlein, 15, of Waban, Mass., an identical twin brother of last year's National champ, Ken Schmidlein, finished a close second, earning a $500 bond, while Peter Bloeme, 15, of New York City, earned the $250 bond going to the third place finisher.

Michael "Shawn" Brown, 13, of Olympia, Wash., and Monika Lou, 14, of Berkeley, Calif., first girl ever to reach the national championship round, came in 4th and 5th respectively.

Wilson maintained a steady performance throughout the first 10 events on the way to his triumph, and entered the final event with a 1-1/2 point lead over Schmidlein. The event, a between-the-legs catch, offered a possible three points.

As fate would have it, Schmidlein and Wilson were the final two throwers, heightening the drama and the pressure.

Schmidlein made his two-point effort, but failed on the one-point follow-up, giving him a half-point lead as Wilson stepped up to the line.

The steady West Virginia youngster immediately ended the suspense by catching his two-pointer to clinch the victory, and added a little frosting on the cake by making the one-point catch as well.

the Frisbee to a teammate over the opponents' goal line.

Players are not permitted to run but must advance the Frisbee on the 60 yard long by 40 yard wide field by passing. If the Frisbee touches the ground the other team takes possession.

The historic clash at New Brunswick, N.J. also featured the debut of a girl on the Rutgers team. Peggy Delahanty, a freshman from Creskill, N.J., played several minutes, but did not score.

NAVY IS FLIPPED

Frisbee lovers throughout the world breathed a collective sigh of relief when the United States Navy revealed that it had spent $375,000 on a research project to learn what any Frisbee lover could have told them for free—that the Frisbee is an implement of pleasure, not war.

The Navy had spent nearly four years trying to find a way in which Frisbees could be made into inexpensive carriers for flares to illuminate battlefields.

The Navy, which published its findings in a paper entitled "Adaptation of the Frisbee Flight Principle to the Delivery of Special Ordnance," had not contacted any Frisbee authorities, such as Wham-O Manufacturing Co., which makes the Frisbee, nor the IFA, prior to the experiments.

As a result of the Navy tests, the government has come in for considerable editorial criticism in the American press. Some experts from newspaper editorial comments follow:

"How rare it is that we do not adapt something to military use. Even the lovable porpoise has been used to combat frogmen. So sail on, Frisbee, over backyard fence, park lawn and campus green. Sail on, exclusively in peace."

—MILWAUKEE (Wisc.) JOURNAL

"Now people can go back to playing Frisbee without the dismal thought lurking in their minds that somehow they are paracticing for war."

—PHILADELPHIA (Pa.) INQUIRER

"The Navy's failure might be considered something of another passive victory for the peace children."

—SHREVEPORT (La.) JOURNAL

So the Frisbee has been rejected and at least one symbol of innocence has been preserved."
